bring Wanter and Wanted together. Where merchandise is gathered as here, with most painstaking and intelligent regard to the decrees of good taste; where great buying and far-sighted planning conspire to lower prices; where an established output is equal to the distribution of other people's congested holdings when offered under price---there most naturally you'il find the WANTED. Having the wanted, we print the news daily or the guidance of the WANTERS. Isn't that wise? The question is often asked us: "Isn't it terribly expensive?" Yes, it costs money; too much money to spend it unwisely; too much noney to have it wasted in extravagant or careless statements. A merchant advertiser must love hi goods and love the truth. With that guiding principle it's only left to tell the truth pleasantly to win success.
